Whisky has always been more than what's in the glass

There are moments in life that stay with us forever. Not because of where we were, or what we were drinking, but because of who we shared them with.

Some of my favourite memories were made around a table with friends, a few good drams and conversations that lasted long into the night. It was during one of those evenings that Barrel & Bond began.

A friend who had always insisted they didn't like whisky reluctantly tried a square of dark chocolate before their next sip. Their expression changed immediately. The whisky they'd dismissed moments earlier revealed flavours they never knew existed.

That moment wasn't really about whisky. It was about discovering something unexpected, together. It's the idea behind every tasting we host today, whether it's a birthday at home, a wedding, a corporate evening or a festival.

I hope we have the chance to share a dram together soon.
